

The proposed voting system for Virginia Beach that is now under consideration in federal court may place four sets of local incumbents within the same single-member districts, which also have been called wards. This map shows the incumbents who could be impacted if the plan is approved by the court, with their district or at-large seat listed below their name, and the arrows show what proposed district they live within. This is an edited version of the district boundaries proposed by the special master in the federal suit. The lawsuit deals with City Council elections, which is why only council member residences are marked on the map, but the School Board may be most affected.
